

Overdressed and going to work!

Overdress for Work Day is run annually in aid of Lifelites. Businesses and organisations get into the team spirit for the coming festive season by dressing up in outrageous outfits and going about their daily tasks. Managers in coat tails and admin staff in ball gowns entertain their colleagues whilst raising some money to provide education and entertainments equipment for children in hospices.

Particular thanks go to the staff at IDC Limited, whose outrageous outfits helped raise £200. www.idcuk.co.uk

Staff at RMTGB on Overdress for Work Day

“We had a great time dressing up and causing amusement to our colleagues. Everyone was very generous and donated even if they hadn’t worn a silly outfit.”

Carol Vooght, Operations Coordinator, IDC Ltd

O4WDay is now entering its third year and Lifelites is hoping to build even further on this popular start to the festive season, increasing the amount of companies taking part and boosting the event with Christmas raffles and ‘best dressed’ competitions.

“We are delighted by the willingness of companies to ‘Overdress’ to raise money on behalf of Lifelites. Fundraising is essential to our work in providing sustainable IT installations and technical support to children’s hospices around the country.

Simone Enefer-Doy – Chief Executive, Lifelites
